The new aluminium bar handles from D-Beschlag

Practical modular principle provides versatile solutions

It needs to be right on trend, the new kitchen, and the only one of its kind. This is why kitchen manufacturers also need flexibility in addressing the minor details. With this in mind, D-Beschlag has designed its new aluminium bar handles in the form of a modular system. The company, which above all scores by the option of customising length for its handle solutions, is presenting it for the first time at Interzum 2017.

Variety is the essence of the new bar handles from D-Beschlag. At Interzum, the company will be demonstrating how kitchen manufacturers can be provided with flexibility in responding to trends and ways of individualising looks. Finished in various ways, handle profiles, which reflect the latest design style with clean-cut lines at the front and rounded rear section for a pleasant grip, communicate with six different feet, creating a pool from which customers can draw for their own specific kitchen designs.

The feet not only differ in form and dimensions but also in material: in aluminium, they coalesce homogeneously with the handle profile, as a zinc die-casting part the intermediate and end pieces accentuate the way in which they stand apart from the bar. In terms of their height, the feet always provide the necessary distance from the furniture front, making it easy to grasp each and every one of these decorative fittings.

In particular, D-Beschlag provides variability in the way in which foot and profile are joined together: in some options the square or round-ended profile rests on the feet, either projecting beyond or remaining flush with them. In others, the end pieces envelop the handle profile, giving the bar handle a sleek or rather organically rounded look.

As aluminium can be finished in many different ways, the new bar handles from D-Beschlag cater to any colour and surface trend – from classic brushed stainless steel or fashionable black to a bronze look.
